Name: Obama's America

"Hi, Julie. Do you still think Obama will win the election this year?"

"Yes, David," Julie replied. "As far as I can see nothing has changed in the presidential election. But, on the other hand, I do think the Republicans will regain control of the Senate this year."

"Well, I guess we'll soon see if you're right in your predictions," I replied. "Hey, if Obama does win, what do you think about that video 2016: Obama's America?"

"Well, first off," Julie replied, "I think they misnamed it. They should've left off the 2016 and just called it Obama's America, since only a small portion at the end of the documentary actually discussed the question of what might happen in the future if Obama is re-elected. The video spent most of its time tracing Obama's history to help us understand why and how he developed his dream for America and exactly what changes he is hoping to make."

"That's interesting," I commented.

"Yes, it's a very interesting documentary," Julie replied. "On the plus side, I have to compliment Dinesh D'Souza for his thorough presentation of Obama's life history and also for his excellent analysis of why Obama is doing what he's doing. This video also corrects a number of misconceptions about Obama. For example, I've heard that Obama is secretly a Muslim even though he attended a 'Christian' church for many years before he was elected president. From this video it becomes clear that he's not a religious man. He's just anti-Christian, so he's favoring the Muslims over the Christians. Also seeing his history presented this way makes a compelling argument that he was indeed born in Hawaii as he claims."

"Then you think the birthers are wrong in claiming that he was born in Kenya," I asked?

"Yes. They probably are. However," Julie continued, "it's also clear that Obama is hiding something. No one spends hundreds of thousands of dollars on legal expenses to fight off requests to show his birth certificate if he doesn't have something to hide. I doubt he's trying to hide the place of his birth. But it's pretty obvious he is hiding something."

"Ok," I replied. "I can accept that. But what do you think is the guiding passion that is driving Obama to do what he does?"

"From this video," Julie replied, "it's pretty clear that his driving passion is his anti-colonialism. Our country was originally made up of British colonies and we fought off the oppressive government of King George to gain our freedom. So we think we understand anti-colonialism. But the anti-colonialism that Obama embraced from his father is different. This anti-colonialism is characterized by anti-capitalism, anti-Christian, anti-America and anti-Israel philosophies. Third world countries, such as Kenya, where Obama's father came from, are not only trying to gain economic prosperity, they're also rejecting the message of the Christian missionaries that came from the western nations. So today's anti-colonialism is an anti-Christian and anti-Israel movement as well as a political and economic one."

"Wow," I responded in amazement. "That puts things in a different light. But if that's true, then why did Obama insist on putting God and Jerusalem back into the Democratic Party platform during their convention?"

"That's simple, David," Julie replied. "Obama knows that he has to hide what his real goals are or he will not be re-elected."

"You don't really believe that, do you," I asked?

"I sure do," Julie replied. "Politicians routinely hide information from the voters. If you don't believe this is Obama's philosophy, then consider the article his father wrote that was published in 1965. In it he wrote that when too much wealth is controlled by a small group of people, you fix that problem by using the power of the state to take over and regulate private industry and to set very high tax rates."

"Did he really write that," I asked?

"Yes, he did. And Obama holds the same views as his father. That's what his book Dreams from My Father is about."

"There are a lot of Americans who would call that philosophy un-American," I commented.

"True," Julie replied, "but that's Obama's philosophy."

"Ok," I replied, "But how did Obama get elected if he holds such un-American views?"

"According to the video," Julie replied, "he learned how to use the guilt that many white Americans feel about race and he used that to convince people to promote him and give him opportunities to advance."

"Ok," I replied. "That makes sense."

"Obama has done a pretty good job of hiding what he really believes and who he associates with," Julie continued. "His friends and mentors include people like Frank Marshall Davis, a card carrying communist, Edward Said, a PLO supporter and foe of Israel, Roberto Mangabeira Unger, a radical socialist professor from Harvard, and Jeremiah Wright, the black preacher who says God should 'damn' America, not 'bless' it. With friends like that, it's no surprise that he's hiding this information."

"That's disturbing," I replied thoughtfully. "But I guess we will learn what Obama's actual objectives are during his second term. Perhaps by 2016."

The author found this documentary to be very enlightening. It took the various bits and pieces of information about Obama that he had learned over the last four years and presented them in chronological order with pictures and interviews, so that Obama and his philosophy finally make sense.
